Our Day...

January 29th brings important activities for the women of Iowa State, says Margaret Anne Clark

CHALLENGED with the importance of work to be done throughout the duration by home economics and science trained women, members of Mortar Board, senior women's service honorary, present the fifth annual Women's Day. The guest speaker, Mrs. Raymond Sayre, is herself a master homemaker who is now a regional representative of the National Committee of Civilian Defense.

Throughout the day Mrs. Sayre is expected to stress the role that the home economics trained woman in the Middle West will come to occupy in furthering America's plan of ultimate victory in the world conflict.

Money usually spent to provide programs for the day will this year be donated to the campus Student Defense Council.

Although Mortar Board takes the initiative in planning Women's Day, each year has seen increased participation on the part of all women's groups on the campus. Proving the growing realization of the practical use to which their acquired knowledge must be applied, home economics and science trained women alike have banded together for whole-hearted participation.

In 1938 Mortar Board women of Iowa State conceived the idea of dedicating a particular day to the various activities and interests of the women students on the campus. With the president's approval the first day was planned and Dr. Aurelia Henry Rhinehart, President of Mills College, California, presided.

Sister Antonia McHugh, long-time educator and president of the College of St. Catherine, St. Paul, Minnesota, spoke at the second annual Women's Day Convocation. In 1940 the Women's Day speaker was Mrs. Dorothy Houghton, an Iowan and a member of the State Board of Education.

Last year's guest of honor was Mrs. Florence Kerr, director of women's activities in the Works Progress Administration. Prefacing the national crisis which was to arrive so shortly afterwards, Mrs. Kerr spoke significantly on "Home Defense."
